驻华代表处The Challenge

The first two decades of the 21st century is a period of important strategic opportunities for China's economic and social development. During this period, the Chinese Government intends to accelerate its progress in building a well-off society of over one billion people, further developing the economy, advancing science and education, enriching culture, and fostering the quality of life for the people. The state will strengthen the rule of law for stability and harmonious co-existence of its people with the environment. These objectives in building a well-off society mirrors the values and principles of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in many areas, including freedom and dignity, equity and social justice, tolerance, respect for nature and shared responsibility.

As indicated in the 11th Five Year Plan of National Economy and Social Development, China intends to continue the policy of developing western region and promoting the northeast industrial base, taking into account the environmental capacity, the basis and potential for development according to the compared advantages and the strengths and weaknesses of the regions to achieve equities in public services and to attain a more equitable society throughout the country.

There are many reasons why the development between the Eastern Region and the Northeast and Western Regions is lagging, but the primary reasons are the relative backwardness of human resources capacities, development and management and a lack of understanding of the role of government.

The Response

Promoting the development and rejuvenation of the two regions and industrial bases are important tasks of governments at all levels during the 11th Five Year Plan. Strategies to accelerate the strengthening of human resource capacities are critical in achieving these tasks.

Greater investment in human resources development is required to foster talents and to form a social atmosphere to attract and retain talented people. In this regard, the project will help the government departments in Northeast China and Other Old Industrial Bases and the Western Region to reinforce the capacity building in (i) understanding role of government and strengthening HR management capacity of public administrative sectors relevant to the requirements of administrative reform; (ii) strengthening HR management capacity of public institutions to enhance the quality of services, and (iii) strengthening the capacities of the continuing education system to address the knowledge and skill requirements of professional and technical personnel associated with the economic structural adjustments
